

European Union ©

Integral Frontiers

Within its current borders the European Union – EU – remains significantly confined. Its geography cannot be attributed to a superior global power. On the other hand, Greater Europe's format – encompassing the European Cultural Frontiers entirely – provides an outstanding primacy. This intercontinental and maritime geography bestows upon Europe an unequalled global standing, inclusive of geopolitical, strategic, economic attributes and, of course, an impressive array of natural resources.

Frontiers of Europe are determined primarily by cultural realities projected by the European Civilisation in conjunction with requisite geographic factors; accordingly, EU's forthcoming global position can be determined incrementally. Thus, the principal criterion that will decide Europe's global success will be its geography. Accordingly, its integral frontiers will play a decisive role. Currently, the said frontiers are realities based predominantly on demarcations of de jure states.

Frontiers of Europe: Union of Cultures within a Civilisation

Cartography

Europa: Integral Frontiers. Future of European Integration
Political Europe

T. S. Kahvé
Ararat Heritage
London
2012